

Limiting the ability of consumers in a free market is bad business all around. I have had to change carriers several time over the last five years due to relocation and pricing fluctuations, and if I were to change phone numbers every time, the cost would be crushing. Cell phones are the primary contact numbers for my staff, and appear throughout our printed business materials. To change numbers everytime we switch carriers would cost us thousands of dollars extra to keep business cards and sales documentation current with contact info. This should not be allowed to pass.
